

As you put away your decorations this year, don't toss holiday lights in the trash. Non-working and unwanted holiday lights can be recycled. But please, don't put them into your recycling bin! To find the nearest drop-off location, visit RecycleSpot.org.

Did you replace your old clothing or doodads with new, spiffier versions this holiday? Well, don't throw the old ones away! Any household item that is clean and in good working condition can be donated. You can even donate clothing that is worn, torn or stained - it will be recycled. Many thrift operations provide both pickup and drop off services. To find one near you, visit RecycleSpot.org.

Resolve to recycle more this year. Any time you have an item to get rid of, ask yourself:

- Can it be reused, recycled or composted?
- If so, can it be reused here at home, donated or put in my curbside recycling bin?
- If not, where's the right place for me to properly reuse, recycle or compost the material? Find out the best way to get rid of your stuff at RecycleSpot.org.

Is a puppy the newest addition to your family this year? It seems like we shouldn't have to say this, but used pet training pads are not recyclable. Help keep recycling healthy, recycle only acceptable items.
